

TOW BAR

According to product literature, the new Alpha tow bar from Blue Ox is an easy-to-use, foldaway tow bar that has a 6,500-pound towing capacity.

The Alpha features easy-release locking handles for quick disconnect, fits all 2-inch receivers, and mounts and stores on the back of the motorhome. The 35-pound steel unit includes offset triple lugs to better align towing forces and prevent binding, along with rubber boots to protect the legs from road grime. The tow bar also comes with a pair of 7,500-pound-rated safety cables.

The Alpha has a manufacturer's suggested retail price of $695.

FUSE DISCONNECT

The AutoFuse from Tow Daddy Inc. is said to eliminate the hassle of removing a fuse on towed vehicles that require this step when towing.

The AutoFuse installs in 15 minutes at the vehicle's fuse box and is activated whenever the towed vehicle is connected to the motorhome. The device reportedly works with all towed vehicles requiring fuse removal and provides a trickle charge to the battery. Four AutoFuse models are available depending on the type of fuse that must be pulled.

The AutoFuse has a manufacturer's suggested retail price of $89.95.

FUELING PROTECTION

The Chadd Padd is a disposable refueling bib designed to catch and collect any spills that may occur at the fuel pump, protecting the vehicle's finish and avoiding a potentially dangerous fire situation.

The 15-inch-by-20-inch anti-static-treated pads are made of soft and absorbent polymers that can hold up to 11 ounces of petroleum products. The Chadd Padd can be used while fueling or adding oil to any type of vehicle or equipment, or as a drip mat to catch spills before they soil an engine or floor. Each pad includes a perforated partial hole to accommodate most filler ports.

An 18-pad box of Chadd Padds has a manufacturer's suggested retail price of $29.95. Enter the code EZFUEL8 at www.chaddpadd.com to receive a 10 percent discount.
